TOOL #15: Board Retreat Trend-Spotting Exercise

Use this trend-spotting template to generate insights and interaction on a key hot topic at your next retreat—each person presenting one article.

Leverage the Media for Trend Analysis

From a 1983 (not a typo!) interview in the Washington Post with John Naisbitt, futurologist, on how he spots trends:

In a word, Naisbitt analyzes a trend—say, a growing backlash to television, or the waxing of concern about crime—through the systematic reading and clipping and categorizing of millions of news items from thousands of individual copies of newspapers. Actually, content analysis is a technique as old as the hills. The news hole in a given paper on a given day is only so big, and if something comes in, then of necessity something must go out.

So if you analyze what is coming in and what is going out, country-wide, on a systematic basis, you start to pick up shifts and movements, a nation’s worries. Trends, John Naisbitt says, are generated from the bottom up (though fads come from the top down). That is, America changes most substantively at the grass-roots level, contrary to what Washington and New York may think. And it is at the grass roots level that our social, political and industrial organizations are undergoing massive change.¹

John Naisbitt’s 1982 book, Megatrends: Ten New Directions Transforming Our Lives, was on the New York Times bestseller list for more than two years mostly as No. 1. Megatrends was published in 57 countries and sold more than 14 million copies.²

Reminder! Attach a photocopy of the article to this worksheet.

Executive Summary

A study by Gallup says that the percentage of Americans who “identify” with a specific Protestant denomination has dropped from 50 percent in 2000 to just 30 percent in 2016. “Among Protestants, the most popular denomination is Baptist.” And according to research by Pew, “millennials seem to be more attracted to nondenominational churches than previous generations are.”

Implication for our organization

Historically, our organization has employed two full-time staff to market our church resources to denominations, generally by building relationships through the district or regional executives (and their annual meetings). Perhaps we should split our focus into two staff and volunteer teams: denominational churches and nondenominational churches?

My Recommendations

1. Ask our CEO to conduct an analysis of our denominational relationships (sales, etc.). Is it trending up or down?
2. Ask our CEO to study the feasibility of launching a pilot program or test to nondenominational events and conferences and/or influential churches—to discern receptivity and interest in our resources.
